Public Land Gemsbok (Oryx) Hunts

This outfitter offers the “Out of Africa” experience on free ranging Oryx (Gemsbok) but you never leave New Mexico, you are on the huge White Sands Missile Range (WSMR) and also on McGregor Range. He is one of the few licensed Outfitters operating on both of the ranges and have been there since Outfitters were legally allowed on WSMR. The WSMR and the McGregor Range hunts are public land hunts and the licenses are allocated by drawing with complete control of the numbers of licenses and more important the number of hunters. There are numerous hunts to apply for on the WSMR hunts beginning in September of 2015 and run through February of 2016. McGregor Range hunts are normally in December or January. WSMR hunts are three days hunts and McGregor Range which begin=s about 25hunts are two day hunts. These hunts normally have over a 90% hunter success rate.

WSMR hunts are once in a lifetime while McGregor Range hunts are not. If you have already hunted on WSMR then you can trophy hunt again on McGregor Range. The other option for someone that has held a WSMR permit is to apply for the broken horn hunt on WSMR. There are many loop holes, tips and historical knowledge items that this outfitter is sharp on and the outcome of the hunt proves it.

White Sands Missile Range (WSMR) is a United States Army rocket range of almost 3,200 square miles (8,300 km) in parts of five counties in southern New Mexico. The largest military installation in the United States, WSMR and the 600,000-acre (2,400 km) McGregor Range Complex at Fort Bliss to the south (southeast Tularosa Basin and on Otero Mesa) are contiguous areas for military testing. White Sands is the site of the first atomic bomb test.
