Barren Ground Muskox & Arctic Wolf Combo Hunt

This is a combo hunt for a Barren Ground Muskox & Arctic Wolf. The hunt takes place east of the Thelon Game Sanctuary. Hunters and their guides travel by snowmobile to the south of Baker Lake which is the geographic centre of Canada.

The first hunts for barren-ground Muskox in this area were carried out in March 2007 where we took 9 animals with 5 of 9 making B&C. Now that we can hunt in late April with temperatures 20 degrees milder, we expect to take some record book Muskox as the area is virtually un-hunted. Fixed camps are not used because flexibility and mobility are the keys to giving hunters an excellent opportunity to harvest a trophy Muskox and Arctic wolf. It is because of this mobility of being able to camp "on the trail" that we have enjoyed virtually 100% on mature Arctic wolves. Pelts of the Arctic wolf come in a variety of colors from almost white to black but most have grayish blue tinge to their fur.

Accommodations are in comfortable insulated tents with cots and propane heaters. Clients are expected to help out the guides in setting up camp and with the camp chores.

Our spring hunt is a 7 day package based on 2 hunters.

Cost Per Person:

Hunt Price: US $9995.00 each plus 5% GST

Arctic Wolf Hunt in Canada's North

Our Arctic Wolf hunts coincide with the northern migration of the over half a million Qamanirjuaq and 200,000 Beverly caribou herds as they move northward out of the tree line to their traditional calving grounds.

Hunters and their guides travel by snowmobile to the west of Arviat in searching for fresh wolf tracks in areas where there is a good concentration of caribou. The wolf packs follow migrating caribou and once fresh tracks are found, the wolves are then tracked by snowmobile. Whenever possible, tracking is done downwind or at least crosswind.

Usually the hunters and guides don't have to track for more than a day when the wolves are jumped and spotted. Accommodations are in comfortable insulated tents. Fixed camps are not used because flexibility and mobility are the keys to giving hunters an excellent opportunity to harvest a trophy Arctic wolf. Clients are expected to help out the guides in setting up camp and with the camp chores.

It is because of this mobility of being able to camp "on the trail" that we have enjoyed virtually 100% on mature Arctic wolves. Pelts of the Arctic wolf come in a variety of colors from almost white to black but most have grayish blue tinge to their fur. Our spring hunt is a 5 day package based on 2 hunters. Unparalleled Arctic Photo Opportunities

Travelling North can be considered a serious challenge when one thinks of the obstacles to overcome. Getting there for one thing is costly and not always easy. The weather, the warm clothes needed, the rough ride on rugged terrain can add to the list of inconveniences. But there again, to some, these will only mark the beginning of an exciting adventure.

There is no doubt that the thrill which photography in Nunavut brings far outweighs the difficulties one can encounter. Just imagine yourself facing thousands of caribou, a muskox, or even a wolf in the wild. If you are not careful enough you could even find yourself face to face with a polar or grizzly bear.

There are, of course, other less threatening wild animals such as hares, siksiks and foxes that you might encounter. Depending on the season, a boat ride might bring you close to a pod of beluga whales or some seals coming out for a breath of fresh air. How about the thousands of shore birds, geese, cranes, hawks, falcons, owls or loons (to name only a few) that migrate through our territory?

Maybe, you prefer to stay closer to town and go for a walk to discover vestiges of the past. Visit some of the historical sites and take photos of ancient tent rings, kayak rests, abandoned food cache and graves. See the stone where the legendary Kiviuq’s mother’s foots are imprinted from standing motionless waiting for the return of her son, gone at sea. immortalize the shaman’s rock, where one used to stand for hours on end, in search of spiritual power.

You won’t want to miss the amazing array of wild flowers. Here again, photographers may experience unusual challenge as they often find themselves crawling on their knees in the attempt to capture the blooming flora that is often elusive to those who don’t walk their nose to the ground.

At night, though, you want to look up and enjoy the beautiful northern lights that span across the arctic sky, reflecting over the bay or a small lake, the sun that never finishes setting and the sweet pastel lights it casts on the horizon for hours on end.

If you ever get tired, or if the weather is really not cooperating, you can walk the streets of Arviat, visit an elder, sip a cup of tea with new friends and photograph Inuit drum dancers, throat singers, dog teams or snowmobile races or simply people going about their daily life in a small isolated community.

One thing is for sure, photography in Nunavut is nothing like what you have previously encountered. The colors, the long spring and summer days, the magnificent and immense sky and the friendly people will all give you plenty of memories to share. Truly, the possibilities are as endless as the tundra in front of you.

Polar Bear Hunt in Canada's Arctic

This is the “Ultimate” Arctic hunt for one of the world's most formidable predators and the #1 big game trophy in North America. Government biologists closely monitor Polar Bear populations in the Canadian Arctic and allow a limited amount of licenses to be issued each year in the Western Hudson Bay Population. The Polar Bears migrate northward from the Churchill, Manitoba area which is known as the Polar Bear Capital of the World.

Our first hunts for Polar Bears were carried out in November 2006 when Jeff Chaulk of Gaylord, MI harvested a 10-1/2' Polar Bear that made #9 SCI all-time. Since then, we have been able to maintain an average of over 9 feet. Our clients have seen anywhere from 5-10 bears a day with some of our clients seeing 100 bears in 10 days of hunting.

For your comfort and safety, we built a camp in 2006, approximately 100 miles north of Churchill, Manitoba, the Polar Bear capital of the World. You stay in comfortable 12x16 insulated cabins with spiked doors and windows to keep our nightly visitors out. The cabins come with indoor toilets, propane heaters and generated electricity. A separate 12x28 cabin serves as the kitchen for hearty home cooked meals and a place to get together in the evenings for cards games and relaxation. We also have a central shower room in one of the buildings.

Why fall hunts? You will see 80% more bears compared to spring hunts and the temperatures are milder. The fall temperatures can be anywhere between -10c to -25c compared to -40 below temperatures in March.

Hunting Adventures

Float Plane access to a vast area that is approximately 30,000 square miles. We have 5 comfortable camps for when the caribou cooperate and portable tent camps for when they don't. This gives give us the mobility to move with the herds to ensure high success hunts.

Our main camp is at Henik Lake on the shores of scenic South Henik Lake at the narrows separating South Henik and North Henik Lakes. Additional camps are located at Edehon Lake, Maguse Lake, Nabbajuak Lake and our bear camp is located on the shores of Hudson Bay. Go to the "traveling to Henik page" or "camps & outposts page" to find the location of our camps and outposts.

The Southern Nunavut region is home to abundant wildlife including caribou, polar bear, muskox, wolf, wolverine, grizzly bear and numerous species of small game and birds. Fishing is fantastic; pristine arctic lakes, rivers and streams of this region provide ample opportunities for trophy northern pike, lake trout, and arctic grayling. Our main caribou camps are at Henik Lake and Edehon Lake at the edge of the tree-line, fifty minutes (175 km or 105 miles) by air west and southwest from the community of Arviat, Nunavut (west coast of Hudson Bay).

The narrows between South and North Henik Lakes are an important crossing and migration route for the Qaminirjuaq caribou herd. Our Edehon camp is a bow hunter's paradise with small stands of spruce, rocky outcrops that provide excellent cover for the avid bow hunter. The Qaminirjuaq herd is one of the largest in the north, consisting of over 400,000. The mass migration of these animals is a site to behold.
